were Daniel's saw in the town. One evening he went on a hunt with his dog, and a little boy was also among the companions. They found a deer and killed it, and as they were returning home, the deer ran away. One evening, while walking through the woods, the boy came upon the deer and killed it. The boy then cut up the deer and carried it home. The next day, the boy showed the deer to his father, who was much surprised. He asked the boy how he had killed the deer. The boy replied that he had shot it with a rifle. The father was very much pleased, and said that the boy had done a fine thing. He then took the rifle and taught the boy how to shoot. The boy soon became a good marksman, and was able to shoot deer and other game. The boy was very successful in his shooting, and became a fine hunter. He was a fine figure for a boy, and was always ready to help his father in the field. The father was a good hunter, and had many fine stories to tell. He was a good man, and was respected by all who knew him.
